Jonny Sontag is an Asper alumnus that currently works as an Accounts Development Manager for Vincent Design Inc. Jonny's entire career has been spent working in a sales-related capacity for a multitude of industries. Jonny says, "It did not happen right away, but I consider myself successful. I often consider this to be my biggest professional accomplishment."

Jonny believes he can offer a unique perspective to students interested in a career in sales, although his background encompasses a much wider variety of subjects. Jonny's experience over the past 20 years has also included many personal struggles, so he hopes to provide inspiration to anybody going through similar crises. Some of these areas include:

- The sense of belonging by fitting in vs. the importance of being unique, especially relative to his time as a student at the Asper School of Business (i.e. Identity Crisis!)
- Mental health (specifically depression, anxiety, and relevant treatment)
- How we view friendships
- Career failures (and eventual successes)
- Defining Success
- Career paths
- Chosen area of expertise
- Positivity

Jonny also notes, "Although I feel proud of my accomplishments in the above-mentioned areas, I feel it is important to recognize the fact that they're always works in progress. In addition to a standard speaking engagement, I'm very open to an interactive format. Appealing to everyone in a room is difficult, so I love the idea of fielding questions about real-world examples."
